

ABSTRACT

A method of operating a discharge lamp includes modulation of lamp power with a first longitudinal mode frequency to reduce segregation of the vapor phase species within the arc tube. The first longitudinal mode excitation frequency is determined by the acoustic response spectrum observed at an upper region of the arc tube when operated vertically. A frequency in an arc-straightening frequency range may also be added to the input power to straighten and center the arc.

5